

MISS GLENNVILLE RODEO QUEEN PAGEANT APPLICATION INSTRUCTIONS

The biggest mistake a contestant can make is to believe that the competition begins when she arrives at the rodeo grounds for the horsemanship competition. The competition begins when a contestant submits her application and other information to the pageant directors. These documents, along with your photo, create the all important first impression. Long before you meet the pageant directors or judges they will see your application and begin to associate it with you. For the judges, the application can be a very important decision making factor. An application can at times be the difference between winning and losing the competition.

APPLICATION GUIDELINES:

- The application and other documents should be neatly TYPED. Never submit an untyped application. If you must, borrow a typewriter from your school or church.
- When you first receive the application, make copies of it to practice and tune up what you want it to say before typing the final draft. Making extra copies will also prevent you from submitting a messy application with white out covering mistakes.
- Have someone else proofread your application for any errors or unclear thoughts. You may not always catch them.
- Make sure that you tell the truth fully on your application.
- Make a copy of the final application you submit and study it. If judges ask you questions about your application, you will remember the information you submitted. Also, make sure that you fill out the application, not your mother or anyone else. You must believe in what this application says and be the person you describe.
- Do not use cute or informal language. Think of this as a job application and fill it out as such.
- Do not use nicknames! (But please let us know if you go by any other names.)
- State your accomplishments, but do not brag or drag on about everything since grammar school. The most important accomplishments have to do with leadership, public speaking, education, and horse show or rodeo awards. These types of accomplishments help the judges discern if you have the qualities needed to represent our rodeo. Listing too many things will become tedious for the judges, which can cause them to miss something important; stick to the basics.

Remember, a neatly filled out application with impressive grammar, goals, and achievements will put you one step further toward your goal of earning the queen, junior queen, or princess title you seek.

GOOD LUCK!!
